Each line is a screen in the film, at the time it appears. The timestamps are the video's own, so they can be typed straight into the player.

0:05 1. A player joins a club

Signing up, confirming, and being picked

- 0:11 Fishers is club cricket on a phone: fixtures, availability, selection and the scorebook. This is a player opening it for the first time.
- 0:46 Signing up asks one thing first — whether you run a club or play for one. The app is a different shape for each.
- 1:13 The quick start is a sport and a mobile number. Everything else about a player can wait until they have been picked once.
- 1:25 New players are not searched for; they hand over a link. This one goes in the club's WhatsApp group, and the secretary invites them from it.
- 1:38 Home before a club: the profile is part filled, and there is nothing in the diary yet.
- 1:59 A club is somebody's real membership list, so an address gets confirmed before it can join one. The code arrives by email.
- 2:23 The secretary sends the invite from that link, and it is waiting on Home — no code to type in, no email to go and find.
- 2:36 Accepted, and the club's season is theirs: fixtures, the squad, the chat and the scores.
- 2:44 The profile keeps a score of itself. What is missing is what a captain looks at when picking, so the app says which line to fill in next.
- 2:58 A cricketer's profile: where they bat, what they bowl, the standard they play and how far they will travel.

3:07 2. Can you play on Saturday?

Availability, from both ends

- 3:17 The Fixtures tab is every fixture of every club you are in, each asking the one thing it needs: can you play?
- 3:28 Three taps — available, maybe, can't play. The answer is saved as it is tapped and the captain sees it immediately.

2. Can you play on Saturday? (continued)

- 3:40 It says what you said, and it can be changed until the side goes up.
- 3:51 The calendar is the other way round: mark the Saturdays you are away and every fixture on them is answered at once.
- 4:06 A weekend away marked once, rather than a message to the captain for each game.
- 4:13 And the days you usually play, so the season starts from your own pattern rather than from nothing.
- 4:31 Inside a fixture: where, when, the match fee, and who else has said yes.

4:39 3. The captain picks the side

Availability, reliability and who has sat out

- 5:18 The captain's selection board for Saturday. Everyone who could play, in one list.
- 5:28 Beside each name: what they said, what the calendar says, and how reliably they turn up when they are picked.
- 5:40 The assistant can suggest a side from availability, reliability and who has been left out lately. The captain is the one who picks.
- 5:54 Eleven picked and two down as reserves, in batting order.
- 6:02 Publishing tells everybody at once.
- 6:17 The squad lands in the club chat, where the rest of the week's arrangements already are.

6:52 4. A T20, ball by ball

Twenty overs a side, scored on the phone

- 7:07 Tonight's fixture: a floodlit T20, twenty overs a side. The captain has the book.
- 7:19 Before a ball: the terms both captains settle at the toss. Twenty overs, four an over each, a six-over powerplay, white ball.
- 7:41 One captain proposes and the other agrees, each against their own name. There is no toss until both have.
- 7:55 The toss, recorded before the team sheets, the way it happens.
- 8:58 The team sheet is picked from the club's squad, in batting order, with the captain and the keeper marked.
- 10:08 Openers and the bowler to start. From here the app is a scorebook.
- 10:35 One tap a ball. The score, the two batters, the bowler's figures and this over so far.
- 11:04 A boundary asks where it went. The field mirrors for a left-hander, so 'driven through cover' is right for both.
- 11:13 The powerplay is on the screen while it lasts, with the overs left in it.
- 11:40 Extras are the arithmetic the app does rather than the scorer: a wide they ran a single off is two runs, and both of them wides.
- 12:22 A wicket takes the bowler's name, the fielder's, and who is in next.

4. A T20, ball by ball (continued)

12:45	A no ball sets a free hit. While it stands, only a run out can get the batter, and the sheet offers nothing else.
13:12	Nobody bowls two overs in a row and nobody bowls more than their four, so at the end of an over the app asks who is next — and says who cannot.
13:57	Twenty overs bowled. The innings closes itself.
14:12	The chase, with the target, the rate it needs and the Duckworth–Lewis–Stern par beside it in case the rain comes.
15:21	Last over, and the arithmetic every fielding side is doing in its head.
15:48	The result, from the log rather than from anyone's addition.
16:00	Player of the match, and the game is finished.
16:10	The full card: every batter, every bowler, the extras and the fall of wickets.

16:22 5. The rest of the cricket

The card, the wheel, the season and the book

16:38	Every match the club has played or is playing, live and finished.
16:47	A finished league match from earlier in the season, with its own card kept the same way.
17:03	The wagon wheel is built from the same balls — every scoring shot, where it went and what the stroke was.
17:16	And a commentary, written from the log rather than typed by anybody: over, bowler, batter, what happened.
17:35	The 2nd XI are playing at the same time, scored on somebody else's phone. Everyone in the club sees it move.
18:15	What else the book can do: correct a ball three back, set the field, add penalty runs, cut the overs for rain, or hand the book to somebody else.
18:30	Scorers get it wrong three balls back, not just on the last one. Pick the ball and the innings winds back to it — recorded, not erased.
18:48	One person scores at a time. The book moves when they pass it on, and the trail keeps who had it when.
19:16	The club's season, folded up out of those cards: runs, wickets, catches — nobody types this in.
19:35	The club's public page — record, top players and next fixtures — for anyone who has heard of the club and has no account.
19:55	Every club and team has a QR code. At the toss the other captain scans it, and the scorecard knows who they are without anyone spelling a name.
20:19	A player's own figures, and the record they are building across seasons.
20:30	All of it lands back on Home: what is in progress, what is next, and what the club needs from you this week.

Recorded on the iOS Simulator against a seeded demo season. Invented clubs and invented players, not a real club's records.
